

Imaging Blackness: Race and Racial Representation in Film Poster Art

By Audrey Thomas McCluskey, Melvin Van Peebles

Indiana University Press. Paperback. Book Condition: new. BRAND NEW, Imaging Blackness: Race and Racial Representation in Film Poster Art, Audrey Thomas McCluskey, Melvin Van Peebles, These striking, colourful posters, selected from the more than one thousand housed at Indiana University's Black Film Center/Archive, graphically illustrate the artistic and thematic range of racial representation in the American film industry from its early days through the present. Chosen for their value as cultural artefacts, they combine art and commerce and are richly imbued with historical and social meanings that continue to engage and inform. The earliest posters, such as the one from pioneering black filmmaker Oscar Micheaux, represent truly independent productions. That crop of "race movies," dating from the late 1920s through the early 1940s, targeted a black audience hungry for respectful images of themselves. In Hollywood films, however, black life was often presented in contorted and narrowly defined ways, reflective of America's racial morass. Yet as a whole, the posters managed to capture the artistry, if not the full range, of black performance. Many of these posters appear in the touring exhibition "Imaging Blackness: Film Posters from the Black Film Center/Archive." Since they were originally produced as ephemera that would follow...
