Excerpt: . . . containing the preposition of and a noun--31oses-1 law is the same as the law of Moses. Phrases with of generally mean either what a thing is made of, or what it belongs to. Now if a phrase stands instead of an adjective or a possessive case, it is plainly an enlargement of the subject or object, just like an adjective. These may be called adjective phrases. The men in that city all perished, is the same as that city's inhabitants all perished. The magistrate addressed the London gentleman is the same as--the magistrate addressed the gentleman from London. Here in that city is an enlargement of the subject, and from London is an enlargement of the object. Exercise VII. --Analyse these sentences; say what each preposition shows, and say whether it forms part of an adverb phrase or an adjective phrase. The farmer wants...
